REGULARS WIN, WOODRUFF IN-JURED, FOX A PROUD FATHER.

Volunteers Had Little Chance to Win Against Champions-Home Runs by Heydon and Killen.

Capt. William Fox was missed from the game yesterday, but he would have been missed more at home had he been at the park. He is thinking of purchasing a pedometer to wear on his night garment as he contemplates many cross-room runs during his nights at home this summer. Fox made the official announcement to Manager Watkins yesterday afternoon that he has a young candidate for the team. The candidate is so young the happy father did not know just whether the youngster desired to be an infielder or just a general "bawler." William Fox, jr., made his entrance at 11 o'clock vesterday morning, and Captain Fox was excused from the game between the Regulars and Volunteers in order to have pienty of time to give thanks to the

The practice game resulted in an overwhelming victory for the Regulars, who defeated the Volunteers by a score of 20 to 3. Orville Woodruff, who signed a contract on Tuesday, entered into the game first as catcher for the Regulars, but was shifted to second for the Volunteers. During his stay behind the bat he met with a severe injury when going after a foul ball. The ball struck him on the hand and fractured one of the small bones. He will not be able to resume practice for several days. After Woodruff was hurt he went to second for the Volunteers, and Heydon traded positions with him. William Kellum was captain of the Vol-unteers, and George Hogriever acted in the same capacity for the Regulars. Hogriever played second base and was in earshot of the opposing captain during the entire many personalities in a good-natured way, and joked each other throughout the conworkout for the players, as well as settling the dispute that came up Tuesday morning when the Volunteers challanged the Regulars for a game. All of the men under contract, with the exception of Fox, participated in the game. Cribbins covered Hogriever's territory in right, while Ford, a young pitcher with a promising future, twirled for the Regulars. There was hardly any choice of positions in selecting the line-up for the Volunteers. The team was mostly made up of pitchers. Flick was at short and he was as slow as a threshing engine compared with an up-to-date automobile. Flick has never been used to early spring training, and the course he has been put through here has made his muscles very sore. His work at short was, therefore, of a very poor class. Pickett was at third and he seemed to feel the effects of the hard training.

Tom Williams pitched the first part of the game for the Volunteers and the Regulars had fun with his curves. Tom did not let himself out, as it was the first time he has done much hard work this spring. Killen went in against the Regulars the latter part of the game and he fared little better. Manager Watkins was much im-pressed with the work of Ford. Heydon failed to do any batting while playing with the Volunteers, but when he shifted to the other team he lifted the ball over the right-field fence for a home run. Killen also made a home run over the fence in deep right center. Jones and Tamsett, two of the new regular men, were in their regular positions and played good ball. Pitcher Cribbins was in the game, but he was too stiff to do much good. The score follows:

Wholesale League to Meet.

The Wholesalers' Baseball League will hold a meeting at the Commercial Club tomorrow evening to organize for the season. Five teams have already become members. and one more team is needed to complete the organization. Games will be played on Saturday afternoons, the same as last season. The teams already in the league are Eli Lilly Company, Daniel Stewart Drug 169 Company, Mooney-Miller Drug Company, Ward-Atias and Indianapolis Rubber Company.

Pittsburg Here To-Morrow.

The Indianapolis players will put in a hard day's practice to-day. Most of the men are getting over their early soreness. but some of them are still in the raw stage and require plenty of working out to place them in condition to play. The Pittsburg Nationals will play here to-morrow and Saturday, and with good weather large crowds should witness the games.

An Organization That Is Said to Be Quietly Doing Much Good.

Working quietly, without ostentation and with little public recognition, the National Civic Federation has accomplished much good in averting threatening controversies between employers and employed, and in settling disagreements after strikes were in progress. This association is the natbecame greater and labor unions extended their scope, it was inevitable that struggles between the two should be more stub outcome, the public would be exposed to these contests for higher wages, shorter entitled to be recognized. It was finally decided by a number of broad-minded men embracing a representative number of the employers, the labor organizations and the general public. There is much misunderstanding in regard to the functions of the Civic Federation, the idea of compulsory arbitration being very prevalent. On the contrary, this association does not attempt to decide the merits of a claim, but is essentially a board of conciliation; bringing together the contestants and en-couraging frank and full discussion of all might have been cleared up. It has been found during the existence of the Civic during the existence of the Civic Federation that most of the labor leaders appreciate the fact that a manufacturing plant cannot be run at a loss, and, on the other hand, the large majority of employers desire to have their men contented Numerous voluntary advances of wages have been reported during the past year, testifying to the readiness of employers to share profits where the business increased sufficiently to warrant a change. Many British labor leaders attended the recent convention at New York, and students of industrial problems all over the world are keeping in touch with the operations of the Civic Federation. As its usefulness is successfully demonstrated it is probable that other countries will adopt similar methods, since it has long been a source of regret that such great losses should result from these struggles between labor and capital, not only to the contestants, but to the entire community.

HORRIBLE TALES.

Their Equals Only in Fiction.

Kansas City Star.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg Tuesday told of a remarkable incident that occurred recently near Vitebesk, Russia. A peasant with his wife and child set out by sleigh for a village a few miles from their home. They were pursued by wolves and the father tried to persuade the mother to throw out the infant so that The woman refused, and in the struggle she and the baby rolled out of the conveyance into a ditch, where they lay unnoticed by the wolves who overtook the sleigh and devoured the man and the horses. The tale is curiously like the one that Browning used in his "Ivan Ivanovitch." In the poem the Russian mother starts in the sleigh with her three children through the forest to a distant village. She arrives alone almost unconscious, and when the first peasant she meets, Ivan Ivanovitch, questions her as to what has become of the children, she brokenly tells the story-how the wolves leaped into the sleigh and dragged out one after the other, snatching the baby from her very arms. The horrified Ivan thereupon kills the false been chopping wood.

mother with the ax with which he has Russia seems to offer good material to the poet and novelist. The Bookman calls attention to an Odessa dispatch, printed early in March, which tells of the kidnaping of a stonemason near Baku, who was police any idea of the location of the empty house which had been converted into a tomb. It was believed, the dispatch said, that the woman was a Mohammedan, whose husband had thus taken vengeance upon her for her infidelity. This particular kind of revenge is fairly common in fiction. Bal-zac used it in "La Grande Breteche," in which the suspicious husband has the closet walled up which his wife had sworn was empty. Poe allows a man to get satisfactorily rid of his enemy in a similar man-ner in "The Cask of Amontillado." Conan Doyle took a hint from his predecessors in h.s story, "The New Catacomb," and re-cently Mrs. Edith Wharton challenged Balzac to a comparison on his own ground in her tale of "The Duchess at Prayer." If the enterprising correspondents at St. Petersburg and Odessa are to be relied upon, it is difficult for fiction to surpass the strangeness of truth.

PANAMA CANAL OBSTRUCTIONS.

Wherein Engineering Science May Easily Overcome Them. Boston Evening Transcript.

Should the Colombian Congress complete the ratification of the Panama canal treaty without amendment the sensationalism wil be pretty well taken out of this whole matter, except as some of the old and exploded yarns concerning that enterprise may be revived to keep up the excitement. We are a little surprised to see the usually well-informed and alert Washington correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle nodding a bit in this respect. He says: "Among the big engineering obstacles that will have to be overcome, two are held by some people to be so formidable that they may defeat the entire scheme and involve our government in the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars. One of these is the construction of a dam at Bahai, to prevent the inundation of the surrounding low country. To do this it will be necessary to build levees to unknown heights on very bad, marshy ground. The other is to devise a scheme to control the waters of the Chagres river in the rainy season." Then he proceeds to tell of the sudden floods that swell this stream without warning, bringing up the old story of a rise of fifty-two feet in two hours. Had he read the very interesting article in the Engineering Magazine last year, by General Henry L. Abbott, on "The Panama Canal as Involving the Regulation of the Chagres River," he would not have found it necessary to sound this note of alarm. This was a very technical paper by one of the most accomplished engineers in the country, a man of spotless integrity and possessed, perhaps, of more exhaustive in-formation concerning the economic and engineering features of the Panama route than any other person in this country. It would give great confidence and satisfaction to the country if the canal commission could have him and others like him in its membership. His purpose in this paper was to show that the Chagres river, far from being a menace, would be "a most useful friend," supplying all the water that could ever be demanded for centuries to come, by any possible traffic; yet, with judicious regulation, giving no annoyance to shipping at any point of the route. His suggestions did not favor building a single dam at Bahai, with "levees to unknown heights," but two dams, the second at Alhajuela, twenty-nine miles above Bahai. A single dam would involve a summit level higher than desirable for convenient lockage and would occasion a larger loss by infiltration than though reinforced by a second. The lower reservoir, constituting the summit level of the canal, might thus have much less elevation above the sea, as it would be required to store only about two-fifths of the flood reserve,

General Abott had heard that "fifty-twofeet-in-two-hours" story. He calls attention to it by way of comparison. We believe it was even told under oath to a Senate committee. Senator Morgan and the New York Herald might be willing to swear to it still. As a matter of fact, so far as a verified record exists, the highest | an excess you are much more unnerved flood ever known in the Chagres did not reach forty feet. THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE and perhaps in other sections of the country that show greater rapidity of rise than the Chagres. It is extraordi narily similar in its flood behavior to the Roanoke river above Neal, N. #### NEW SOURCES FOR PAPER.

Waste Products and Quick-Growing Vegetation Are Sought For.

The development of various new sources of supply for paper-making material promises to relieve very considerably the strain upon the forests caused by the continued cutting off of enormous acreages of spruce, then compelled to brick up a woman in a poplar and other trees for the production of been so far in excess of the visible supply that it has become a serious question, not only as to the results of such extensive forest devastation, but where the material for paper making was eventually to come

> Fortunately, the tendency appears to be to look for pulp-making material to vegetation of rapid growth, and which is therefore correspondingly easy to reproduce, rather than to trees, which represent many years of development. The utiliza-tion of waste materials also promises to afford no little relief, and also to present important new means of wealth produc-tion. In the latter respect great results are looked for in the production of wood pulp. This has been thoroughly accomplished with yellow pine refuse at a paper mill established for the purpose at Orange, Tex., where four sawmills supply material sufficient for a wood-pulp mill of one hundred tons daily capacity. With paper in the neighborhood of $70 a ton, this means an enormous source of new wealth in turning to valuable account materials which hither-to have been burned to get them out of the way. This means much not only for the South, where there are many hundreds of such sawmills, but for all the lumber-producing parts of the country as well. It is predicted that every saw and planing mill of any account will soon have its pulpmaking attachment. Many thousands of tons of wood pulp may therefore be exand chips from such milis. Other sources for paper making in the way of waste materials in the South are rice straw and bagasse, the latter the refuse of the sugar cane after it has gone through the mill. With bagasse thus utilized in Cuba and in the other islands of the West Indies, the value of the product may turn out to go very far in equi ing the conditions between the manufac-ture of cane sugar and beet sugar, and perhaps even carry over to the former the economic advantage that has lately rested

Another new source for paper making that is coming into prominence promises to be of immense value for tropical countries -that is, the utilization of bamboo for the purpose. Bamboo, which is a gigantic grass, grows very rapidly, and produces an enormous quantity of paper-making fiber upon a given area. In addition to the abundant supplies growing wild, it is proposed in various countries to cultivate the bamboo especially for paper making. When cut down the bamboo, like any other grass, will spring up from the roots and soon develop another crop. In Jamaica various parties are now going into the systematic utilization of the bamboo for producing wood pulp, and the colonial government promises to encourage the industry by admitting the requisite machinery duty free and remitting taxes. Since the Island abounds in mountain streams of clear water, it should invite not only the manufacter, it should invite hot only the manufac-ture of wood pulp from the bamboo, but perhaps the establishment of mills for the entire process of paper making on the spot. Our own tropical possessions—Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines—should offer excellent opportunities for the develop-ment of this important resource.

Ten on the Day After.

Philadelphia Record. "For the prostration that follows an excess of alcohol," said a bartender, "nothing is so good as tea. I don't mean ordinary tea, but tea boiled for over a half hour, until all the bitter and powerful acid in the leaves has been extracted. This is a dangerous drink I'm told; it's bad for the mucous membrane and for the heart, but it's the only thing I know of—absolutely the only thing that the day after you have drunk too much makes you feel as if you hadn't drunk a drop. It is all right to take a little tea boiled in this way as a medicine, but it is necessary to be careful not to contract the tea habit. You can get drunk on long-boiled tea, and after suc than would be after an excess of alcohol, with the idea of conciliation, there was a growing feeling of antagonism on both sides, and protracted struggles often grew out of trifling misunderstandings that
